THE INSIDER

HELLO: Miami's Downtown Development Authority welcomed three new

Amaducci-Adams

board members last week. They replace Alvin West and Jerome Hollo, who are leaving because of term limits, and Kim Stone, who resigned when she accepted a job as the manager for the Chase Center in San Francisco. New members are Suzanne Amaducci-Adams, a partner in the real estate practice group at the Bilzin Sumberg firm;

Franklin Sirmans

Spencer Crowley III, a land-use and environmental lawyer at the Akerman firm; and Franklin Sirmans, director of the Pérez Art Museum Miami. Ms. Amaducci-Adams has "played a central role in several projects that have been instrumental to downtown Miami's growth, including Virgin Trains' MiamiCentral Station and the sale of Jungle Island," a release said. Mr. Crowley "has assisted clients in the land use permitting of major projects including Midtown Miami, the Miami Design District, Brickell City Centre and the Magic City Innovation District," the release said. In his four-year tenure at the museum, Mr. Sirmans "has overseen the acquisition of over a thousand works of art through donation and purchase ... and worked to establish the museum's Miami lens by strengthening relationships with existing affiliate groups."
